The first two paragraphs are about the White House Education Conference in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, on Tuesday, November 4, 1955. The conference was attended by five Wilkes students who brought the honor system to life during the season. The event was sponsored by the national White House Conference on Education. The conference is part of a plan to focus citizens' attention on educational and social problems. The students hope to find solutions for the pressing issues. The conference was welcomed by President Eisenhower.

The next two paragraphs discuss the student-organized and student-staffed honor system at Wilkes. The system was implemented to prevent unethical behavior and to ensure a level playing field for all students. The system includes a code of conduct, formal and informal procedures, and a committee to oversee the system. The students believe that the system has been successful in maintaining a high standard of integrity and fairness.

The following paragraphs discuss the Homecoming Queen selection process. The Queen's responsibilities include attending various events and representing the university. The Queen's selection is based on various criteria, including qualities such as leadership, scholarship, and community service. The selection process is open to all female students who meet the requirements.

The last paragraph discusses the Homecoming Dance, which is sponsored by DORMS to be held at Cafeteria. The dance will feature a variety of activities, including a DJ who will provide music and a dance floor. The attendees will enjoy beverages and light refreshments. The dance is open to all students and is a great opportunity to enjoy the Homecoming festivities.
Sadie Hawkins Square Dance
Tomorrow Night At Gym

Balchelor Heads Econ Club Shindig; Wilkie, Schiffer to Call, Play At 8:30 Affair; Admission 50 Cents

In celebration of Sadie Hawkins' Day, the Economics Club will sponsor a square dance at the gymnasium tomorrow night. It was announced by co-chairmen Nancy Schiffer and Beth Miller.

Larry Wilkie, a country music specialist, will call the square dances and Jim Schiffer will be on hand to furnish some slower tempos for those who do not wish to join in a solid evening of square dances.

The attire for the 8:30 to midnight square dance is casual, and to avoid any possible embarrassment, ladies are requested to wear plaid shirts and jeans. An early plan was to make this the school's debut on the square dance scene, but a definite decision could not be reached.

The intermission entertainment, which has become a part of most dances on campus this year, is still in the planning stage. It is expected to be a "party" of sorts, with a comic strip that Sadie Hawkins' Day found its fame.

This day carries with it the connotation that the female will assume some aggressive steps toward the male. Many of the dancers expressed the hope that all who attend will join in the fun and square dancing with this principle in mind.

Tickets are on sale for fifty cents and can be obtained from most club members or at the door tomorrow night.

Pig in a Poke

We trust that most of you freshmen beard yourselves enough to go to assembly Tuesday, though the problem being discussed is merely one which actually concerned them, we doubt very much. At any rate, the justification for an honor system on Wilkes campus proposed a system by which, among other things, there would be no informing on others observing cheating in examinations.

The authors of this travesty went on to propose on "Honor Council" which would have the impressive duty of meeting monthly to discuss the workability and continuation of the system.

Somebody from the audience summoned enough courage to point out that he had just what the authors would be, and got the highly informative answer that while cheating might get around the school, something would have to be done. Unfortunately for the personal system, being an issue a sleep on the wrist, the answers seemed not to deem worthy of their question, nor did they bother to explain what the point was of a system which would be necessary only if and when to be; one which was likely to be needed soon.

Prestige?

When another of the above mentioned was puzzled as to why such a system should be offered them at all, he got the answer that if it were good for the school, why should the system not be good for one? There was other similar yip of prestige along the same line, oblivious to the fact that there is little prestige in practicing the opposite of what one preaches. In short, the gentlemen of honor systems should be reminded that the students and faculty of Wilkes College can be identified with a system little short of hypocritical.

Indeed, we are reminded of an incident a few months ago of one of last semester's discussions of this question (doubts conveniently forgotten) by the gentlemen behind the current proposal, which concerned this concept of prestige. Someone whose name will not help anybody here began to speak, then paused and remarked: "I am assuming that you people are not supporting an honor system merely because you've talked too much to the administration or are identifiably an honor system, and ashamed." The gentleman making the remark then went on with what he had begun to say in the first place, but the room was rimmed with red faces, or so it looked to us.

The incident, we feel, is unnecessarily too characteristic of the thinking on the system we have heard since the discussions began last year.

Who's Who?

The trouble with the thinking that we have heard so far seems not to be quantitative, almost everybody having something to say of suggest, but qualitative, few, if any of the suggestions representing much real thought that the needed to produce something to talk about.

If the apologists for honor systems can't come up with something better than "pride" in the name of pop-culture words and a haze of fuzzy seeming jobs, perchance they ought to sit down and think some more. It does seem odd, though, while many students appear to favor some kind of honor system: sometimes, there seems to be only a very few millitant in this 'student movement.'

Just to make it clear

It occurs to us that some of what we've said above might be interpreted as placing us in opposition to the honor system. This is by no means the case; rather, we have not yet ventured to commit ourselves on the concept in general.

But while we are withholding judgement on the idea itself, we do reserve the right to object to dubious programs supposedly based on the honor concept which may be foisted upon us.

WISDOM OF WILKES

By WEN EVANS

Question: What is your opinion on honor systems?

Professor Young, sophomore: "I believe an honor system would be a definite asset to the educational program of Wilkes. However, an honor system would be even a greater asset to the character of the individual student."

Frederick Kroh, junior, English major: "If the honor system is available to Wilkesmen, regardless of the form it may take, sooner or later, the students will see that the benefits of an honor system and adoption one. Personally I am in agreement with the plan proposed in assembly, wherein by individual honor is encouraged."

Nancy Glassener, sophomore, chemistry major: "The honor system gives the student a sense of responsibility which helps him get along in life. At Wilkes we should have a system of individual honor without informing on one's fellow students."

John Archibald, junior, political science: "While the adoption of an honor system probably proves beneficial to the College in terms of prestige derived, it seems to me that a personal system is more needed than a system of honor. Furthermore, the need for such a system has yet been satisfactorily demonstrated."

John Scandia, sophomore, accounting major: "It sounds good in theory, but I believe that it is just an ideological concept. I don't think it can be made practicable, not even for as young a school as Wilkes."

Frank Ham, freshman, English major: "It is a good idea, if a system can be worked out by which everyone will be benefited."

Evelyn Kemp, freshman, elementary education major: "I think the honor system is a good idea, but I don't think it would work at Wilkes because some of the students aren't mature enough to have the self interest and would just abuse the privilege."

Barbara Poin, freshman, liberal arts major: "An honor system at Wilkes would be a good thing if a method could be worked out to discourage the habit of cheating, especially among individuals who are in common practice in high school."

Butler Hall, Engineers Win In Intramural Football Play

By CLIFF KOBLAND

The busiest week of intramural football so far this season saw both Butler Hall and the Engineers pick up victories and Wexcess lover a loss and a tie.

On Thursday, October 27, Wexcess Hall and the Engineers fought to a 4-4 draw. Wexcess opened the scoring when its fourth-down Engineers' punter, George Morgan, was smothered near his own goal before he could get off his kick.

The next play from scrimmage, Wexcess' speedy halfback Gary Westergaard carried over for the score. The conversion was missed and at the half Wexcess led, 0-4. It wasn't until late in the third period that the Engineers started to move on the passing of their quarterback, Don Pacopis. The Engineers score came as a result of a Pacopis pass to end Harold Patzer late in the third quarter. Both clubs could not move the ball in the final quarter and the game went to the books as a tie.

Engineers Walllop Butler

On Monday, the Engineers picked up their first win of the season with a 20-6 victory over Butler Hall. Paced by their triple-threat quarterback, Don Pacopis, who scored three T.D.'s, the Engineers never had any trouble with the men from Butler. Sheldon Lasows and George Morgan broke into the scoring column for the Engineers. This game was a replay of one that was protested by the Engineers two weeks ago.

Wednesday saw Butler get its first win of the campaign with a close 14-12 victory over Wexcess Hall. The Wexcess team gave the highly favored Butlers a quite a scare when at halftime Butler led by only one point, 7-6. The Butlers score came on a pass interception by Jerry Lind, who ran from his own forty for the score. The extra point was successful when Lind hit Mickey Perlman on a pass play.

Bill Duffy took a Gary Westergaard pass and scampered for a Wexcess TD late in the second quarter. The score stood 7-6 till the final period when Butler added the insurance tally on Stan Abram's back up the middle. Lind this time ran for the extra point.
